the extractive sector is a particular area of expertise for Canada and more than half of Canada's mining assets abroad are located in Latin America specifically in Brazil, Peru, Chile and Colombia. The Canada-Colombia accord was the first free trade agreement in the world to include annual human rights impact assessments (HRIA) and also includes a labour side accord where abuse complaints can be formally registered using Colombia as a case study. James Rochlin and his international and multidisciplinary line up of Canadian and Colombian scholars and activists working in the area of human rights and the judiciary explore what is the best way to identify and operationalize for mutual benefit the concentric space between the interests of extractive corporations in profit and security on the one hand and the interests of the host communities in the promotion of human rights and human security on the other. What can the four emblematic and diverse cases in Colombia—Meta, Sergio, Marmato and Bolívar la Guajira—tell us about how to fine tune and improve a newly implemented governmental HRIA to render it an increasingly useful global instrument to promote simultaneously corporate security and human security for host communities? What is the most efficient and effective way to design and implement corporate social responsibility programs in a manner that promotes simultaneously corporate security and community human security? Written in a clear and accessible style, Profits, Security and Human Rights presents practical lessons on how to promote both corporate security and human security in communities where the extractive sector operates in the global south.

Criticism doubts second thoughts. Although investor-state arbitration (ISA) has been included in investment agreements between developed and developing countries since the 1960s and provided foreign investors with a kind of private justice against developing world host states, it became increasingly controversial in developed countries when it was included in NAFTA in 1993, creating the possibility of ISA claims between and against two developed countries, the United States or Canada, as well as claims against and by a developing state, Mexico. A few years later, the OECD's attempt to finalize the multilateral agreement on investment was stymied by concerted civil society protest and opposition to ISA, and in recent years each new proposed agreement has sparked fresh rounds of protest. What engenders the controversy about ISA while ISA's advantage is that it prevents escalation of international conflict by relieving states from feeling obliged to espouse claims of injured investors against foreign governments? It is criticized for creating regulatory chill whereby states are reluctant to make necessary public policy reforms for fear that changes to the investment environment will lead to expensive investor claims. Are fears of litigation and expensive payouts well founded? Can key modifications to the ISA system such as those added to the Comprehensive Economic and Trade Agreement satisfy critics? And redeem this system of private justice? ISA is really necessary between developed democracies where an independent and professional judiciary can generally be trusted to decide without fear or favour in second thoughts investor state arbitration between developed democracies 16 international investment legal experts have undertaken in depth analyses of isa s economic political and social impacts when included in agreements between developed democracies this timely volume appears at a critical moment seeking answers to the crucial questions that will determine the next generation of international investment agreements
